PhD Researcher

PhD project titled, "Permanence in Economics, Social Preferences and Social Interactions- Application to environmental issues seeks a PhD student to integrate ecological knowledge in the analysis with support from other team members. The main question of the PhD thesis would be to understand the effectiveness of incentives on both long-lasting cooperation and permanence from both the economic and ecological sides when looking at biodiversity conservation. The PhD candidate will benefit from a Co-tutelle agreement between the University of Strasbourg and the Brandenburg University of Technology Cottbus-Seftenberg. The PhD project will be part of the joint research project PEPSI (Permanence in Economics, Social Preferences, and Social Interactions) between the same partners. To apply, send a letter of motivation, detailed CV and copies of undergraduate and graduate transcripts by email to Anne Stenger.
